(e) the details of any other initiatives taken by Government to promote nanotechnology research in India?

THE MINISTER OF STATE OF THE MINISTRY OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY (SHRI KAPIL SIBAL): (a) and (b) India and Canada have concluded an inter-governmental agreement at Toronto on 18th November, 2005 facilitating joint scientific and technological cooperation. Nano-Science and Nano-Technology; Sustainable Energy; Biomedical Technologies; Infotainment; and Natural Disasters and Earth Sciences have been identified as priority areas of cooperation.

(c) It has been suggested to the Canadian Government that a joint Indo-Canadian Centre for Nanotechnology may be set up in India. The suggestion is in the initial stage and no firm response agreeing to this suggestion has been received from the Canadian side. However, Government has launched a "Nano science and Nanotechnology initiative (NSTI)" programme in October, 2001 for encouraging research in nanotechnology.

(d) and (e) Under NSTI, about 100 R&D projects have been supported in the areas of nanofabrication, nanolithography, DNA chips, nanocomposites, molecular electronics, nanosensors, drug delivery, carbon nanotubes and wires etc. 10 Centres of Excellence/Core groups in Nano-Science have been established. 6 new centres on nanoelectronics, NEMS/MEMS, sensors, tissue engineering have also been approved recently. Asum of approximately Rs. 100 Crores has been allocated to various research institutes in the country so far under this programme.
